Board of Trade

A meeting of the Board of Trade was held in the "Review" office on Monday evening last, President A. F. Dulmase in the chair.

The attendance was much larger than for some time previously, and it was decided that the next meeting would be held at the Oddfellows Hall.

Among the business brought up was a motion to have the Associated Boards of Trade, Lethbridge, regarding their insurance.

The letter reads:

September, 30, 1911
The Secretary Board of Trade
Bow Island.

You have probably noticed in the press that the matter of Hall Insurance has been the subject of discussion on the Calgary or the Lethbridge, and other Boards of Trade.

The Lethbridge Board of Trade had referred the matter to the Associate Board of Trade, Lethbridge, and the opinion of the Lethbridge Board is that the maximum indemnity allowed, namely $1 per acre, is so low as to be of very little benefit. It believes that the same should be devised of increasing the amount to $10 or $15 per acre at least.

From the comparative statement of the Provincial Hall Insurance Fund to December 31st, 1910, a copy of which is enclosed, it appears that the result of the year with the exception of the year 1907 the total of indemnity paid out has far exceeded the total of premiums paid in. Any increase in the maximum indemnity to $10 per acre, there would be a burden to the government to be shouldered with an enormous annual loss—be accompanied by a very substantial increase in the insurance rates. The Provincial Government, however, reserves to itself the right to write hall insurance in the province.

It has been suggested that the premiums might be collected from the districts instead of from the towns—that the districts be authorized to raise Hall Insurance funds from a tax levy on the unincorporated value of land, houses, and buildings. The writer is most firmly of the opinion in proportion to the amount of land he is holding out of use.

The Calgary Board of Trade makes the suggestion that a meeting be arranged with a few members of the legislature in November, that the principal Boards of Trade in the province be represented at this meeting by one delegate each, and that the United Farmers of Alberta be given a free hand to submit their views to the government.

The figures show a population of 7,518,305 for Canada as compared with 5,371,351 in 1901, an increase of 1,740,954. It was estimated that the population of Canada would be about eight millions, and that the figure will cause a little disappointment to people of the Dominion.

As compared with the increase of 1,740,954 in the population of Canada, the figures are satisfactory. In the ten years preceding 1910 Canada's population increased by only 538,070 as compared with 1,740,954, which meant an increase of 1,700,551 in the past ten years is large, but it is not so nearly satisfactory as was expected.

The population of Halifax is 48,032, and the increase of 1,740,954 is accounted for by dividing the population of Quebec definitely by B.N.A. 39,790. On this basis the representation of British Columbia in the Canadian Commons will increase from seven to twelve members, Alberta from seven to twelve, Saskatchewan from ten to fifteen, Manitoba from ten to fifteen, Ontario from twenty to twenty-five, Nova Scotia from 18 to 20, and Prince Edward Island from 4 to 5. The next parliament will contain 323 members, an increase of 11, as compared with the present house.

The population of provinces:

Alberta	372,910	73,100
British Columbia	362,768	128,057
Manitoba	451,691	253,211
New Brunswick	351,815	381,129

Population of principal cities and towns in Canada compared for 1911 and 1901, subject to final revision.

Yours truly
J. L. Ludwicks
Secretary pro tem.

After some discussion it was moved by P. E. Ludwicks, seconded by J. H. Hurd, that the secretary write the Associated Boards and signify approval of the suggestion of the Calgary Board.

A letter was also received from the Northwestern Coal and Coke Corporation, dealers in coal and coke, coal and train cars, besides stone, lime etc. This company has a capital of $600,000 and wrote asking whether there was a favorable opening in Bow Island for such a concern as theirs.

J. H. Hurd and J. H. Hurd, seconded by H. E. Booth, that the secretary write the company and invite a representative down.

A proposition was submitted by Mr. Van Dozer of Wisconsin with regard to the establishment of a creamery in Bow Island.

The secretary was instructed to send an invitation to Mr. Van Dozer to come down and explain his scheme more fully.

The secretary announced that a general hall called upon him for assistance with reference to establishing a pottery industry in Bow Island. His visitor believed that Bow Island would be a very favorable position for the purpose and requested that samples of the clay in the vicinity be analyzed and that the Board of

Self Conquest

How Love and Bravery Saved a Man from Himself

By CHRISTOPHER BARKLEY
Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Not far from Fort —, in what was then called the far west, was a ranch house. In those days Americans living in the west, in constant suspicion, and the rancher built his house near enough to the fort to go there with those of his household for protection. He had been at the fort now that the Indian has been eliminated, has sunk to nothingness in importance, the ranch house is but a charred heap, his home burned by the redskins years ago.

Not an hour before the destruction, a couple had come to the fort and a girl, the rancher's daughter, were sitting on the porch veranda in the heat of a sunburn. After a short talk with the United States army because he could neither be controlled nor control himself. He had given up his commission, his ambition, and at the end of a speech not having the hardbooth to meet his father and brother out of money, it was a fact of life that he had given up self in a cavalry regiment, choosing that arm of the service it would send him to the front.

He had not been long at his station when trouble with the Indians came on, and Kimball remained himself so here as to be compelled to travel through the unconsummated marriage and before the lighting was over was made a slave. This gave him time to think and he determined to redeem himself with his family. But a pass for gambling stood in his way.

At the end of a week he had nothing or nothing for the men to do except drink and gamble, and Lieutenant Kimball, who had the responsibility to give him no strength to him, began to play all caution desired him, and he bet wildly. The result was that he became penniless, his brother in law in large amounts.

One or two of his creditors in order to get what they considered to be their dues, had come against him and he found himself a "cut" man, which is the army expression for one whose services were demanded of him, though some done elsewhere, and on the ground that Kimball did not deserve what was inflicted upon him.

Kimball, however, had the acquaintance of Winfield Armour, the ranchman's daughter, at the reception he had been invited to, and others. He loved her, but his love was returned. He confessed his previous life to her and announced his intention to leave the service and instead of a disgrace to his family. She sympathized with him and deeply and proudly him that if he adhered to his resolution for a given time she would marry him.

"But," she said, "I can't conceive that there is such a man as my husband who has asked me to be his wife. He is much older than I, and thus far I respect him only. My love is yours." She recited her former condition when I return to the east I shall accept his proposition."

It had ridden over the ranch house on this moonlight night bid his goodbyes. He had failed to conquer himself and had lost her. The interview was done very quietly.

"Well," he said, "in one thing I am rejoiced—you will be happy. Thank heaven, I am not to draw down with me the curse of the house of my family, while I—am every day expecting an invitation to resign."

Winfield made no reply. What could she say? She had lost him in her heart to upbraid him. And there was nothing she could say to relieve the misery of his soul. She had been too put out her hand in a cause well.

They were both recalled from the melancholy status existing between them by hearing distant sounds of a galloping horse, evidently coming at full speed. Kimball, however, the Indian was not coming from the direction of the fort, but toward it. Kimball knew that the Indians had the means of communication and something told him the comers was a messenger bringing a warning. His fears were confirmed when he put a pistol in the pocket opposite the ranch gate, pulled his horse back on his haunches and cried out:

"The Indians are coming! They're right on us!"

Without a word Kimball ran for the stable next the house and in a few minutes returned leading Winfield's mare, saddled and bridled. Her master was away from the ranch, and there was no one else there but the horses and servants. They, too, prepared for flight. Kimball put his companion on her horse and mounted himself, and they started. Winfield, however, went away toward the fort. They had scarcely started when behind them came a messenger riding a whoop which only an Indian can make.

The fort was six miles from the ranch—not a long distance as an Indian can run, but great to a horse, the fugitives to reach safety with a horde of yelling savages in their rear. The horses knew that yell and put forth all their strength.

Twenty-five miles had been covered when the gallop of a single horse was heard that had evidently distanced the rest. Kimball knew that he was being followed.

"You go on; don't lose any time. I'll overtake you."

He pulled his horse back on his haunches and turned him, for an Indian was right on him. Seizing a revolver, he fired twice, but missed. To his saddle he drew when the man was not a hundred yards from him and drove him. Then, turning, he followed. When he reached the fort to reduce her pace, and he consequently soon caught up with her.

"Did you not go on when I drew you back?" he asked. "This is for you, not for myself. You know that death is my only refuge."

"I shall draw rein every time you do. You are followed."

"You are followed. Those men who are following us are savages. We have now the small Japanese bows and the poorer classes of Japanese dwellings. Japanese in construction, with the characteristic Chinese queerities."

ENTERING PORT ARTHUR.

It is Something Akin to Sailing Through a Picture Frame. Go into the harbor of Port Arthur, and you are in the middle of Alice in Wonderland trick. One sails through a picture frame—the rocky bluffs at the mouth of the river wide enough for a ship to squeeze through without lacing—wondering how there can be room for a ship to anchor between the rocks. The hamlet is something like a hamlet somewhat swives or Norwegian in homeliness. But once behind the frame the wonderland unfolds. The little hamlet disappears, the body, delightfully protected by bird-shunting cliffs. The little hamlet disappears into two big towns.

The old town to the east contains the older Russian houses, barracks, and the like. There are now, however, now the small Japanese shops and the poorer classes of Japanese dwellings. Japanese in construction, with the characteristic Chinese queerities."

MARINE JUNKMEN.

Carrier Snails Load Their Barks With Seeds of Refuge.

The carrier snail, which we saw what the junkman is to the land. It receives its name from its habit of carrying foreign objects on its back. It is a carrier of objects, not a carrier itself remaining with the dying Indian, the others continuing the pursuit. Half the distance between the ranch house and the fort was covered when suddenly a red glare was added to the pale light of the moon. Kimball and nothing. He knew that the ranch house. On, on they sped, the gale adding to the terror of the savages behind them.

Again the footfalls of the pursuing horses, by their varying distinctness, indicated that the Indians were separated, and that the chief, in the charge of the ranch house. On, on they sped, the gale adding to the terror of the savages behind them.

Again the footfalls of the pursuing horses, by their varying distinctness, indicated that the Indians were separated, and that the chief, in the charge of the ranch house. On, on they sped, the gale adding to the terror of the savages behind them.

"There's a rise in the ground ahead," he said. "I am going to stop there and take them as they come on. Hurry to fort. With what I have to offer, I am sure you can certainly reach it."

"No," cried Winfield, who knew very well what this meant.

"Keep on. We shall soon meet a fort from the garrison."

"There we are! Let right light be the first who gets that will get the Indians are on the warpath."

"I will remain with you."

"Hurry on, eric," he said. "I have reached the crest, and, relying in his horse, he dismounted. Seeing that she too, had stopped he said, "My only chance is to lay her till you can send as assistance."

She hesitated. "I am afraid it might be right," he gave her horse, and dashed onward.

Kimball, who had trained his horse for Indian fighting, forced him to lie down, and, holding him firmly by his stomach behind him, waited for the first Indian to come within range. But a moment's pause followed. The Indian, who had been a hundred yards away against the glare of the burning ranch house, appeared the instant the Indian's head was visible, coming swiftly, advancing straight toward Kimball. For the few seconds the savage was on the crest he seemed to be a giant. Then, however, in a few seconds to draw a bead on the man's breast and fired. The Indian made down on to his hands and feet, then fell back, not fifty feet from his enemy.

Kimball saw that in the burning building he had a great advantage. But there was no time to consider before the Indian had shot had shot him.

At the moment one of those bursts of flame that shoot up now and again from burning bushes added intensity to the fire. Kimball, however, was pictured with fury blackness. Kimball, a sure aim at his head and placed his hand on his heart.
